Hannah McDonald was born at Norfolk Plains in 1834; she was the McDonalds' second child. She married John Curran, a settler, at Westbury in 1851 at the age of seventeen.¹ John Curran came to Van Diemen's Land as a convict per the ship Kinnear in October 1842, one of two of that name on board. Unfortunately his permission to marry record does not indicate if he is No. 1 or No. 2.

No doubt attractive in her youth, here, in this 1906 photograph (below), Hannah, aged 72, appears more handsome than pretty.

Her hair is dressed in the severe style of the late 1890s, the usual black bonnet, remembered by her niece May Leary, removed for the occasion. Her dark coloured dress with its tight bodice and gigot (leg of mutton) sleeves and sequin decoration is softened at the neckline with a narrow edging of lace.

Attractive drop earrings and long chain are the trappings of a comfortable existence, but her hands are not those of a woman who has known luxury all of her life. The beautiful golden citrine brooch at her throat has been handed down as a family heirloom.

John Curran died of cancer at Ringwood where he had been a storekeeper from at least the 1880s.

Hannah continued to run the store after his death, later returning to Tasmania. While she was in Victoria she sent money home to her mother, 'a pound every 6 months'.²

She lived on until 27 December 1925 when she died at Latrobe.³ Twelve months prior to this she was living at Wynyard with her nephew Henry George Turnbull whom she appointed executor of her Will and principal beneficiary.⁴

A year prior to her death she made her 'last will and testament' and presumably at that time she had sufficient wealth to fulfil the various bequests:
